MODERN RIDING AND HORSE EDUCATION.

(By Major Noel Birch.)

On the Necessity for Applying Scientific Principles to the Teaching of Riding and the Training of Horses.

"The most exalted seat in the world is the saddle of a swift horse, and the best companion for all time is a book."

—Arab Poetry.

England has long been behind other European nations in certain branches of the equestrian art, and rather despises foreigners for the time and trouble they bestow on riding instruction and on the higher education of the horse. General von Bernhardt says that "Anglo-maniacs and faddists still seek to exercise an influence the reverse of favorable in this respect." France and Germany, to quote only two countries, aim at making both the horse's and the man's training as perfect and as comprehensive as possible.

Riding for spectacular purposes, whether in the riding school that can do that." If we take the brains and time that are put into horse training abroad as a guide, it is really surprising that so many horses at home should be able to walk, trot, and gallop in proper form. Many so-called trained animals which are sold out of England or Ireland to go abroad are treated as unbroken on their arrival unless over six years old, and are trained from the beginning.

As far as the teaching of riding is concerned, our boys are generally taught by the family coachman, often a poor horseman and with no theoretical knowledge; a typical case of the blind leading the blind.

I recently visited the French Cavalry School at Saumur, amongst others, which is the largest establishment of its kind in the world, not excepting Hanover, and witnessed a performance given in the riding school by the Ecuyers (picked riding instructors). They rode in buckskin saddles, having rolls in front of the flap, and a large roll behind the seat; the lower part of the leg was drawn back, and in many cases the knee was not touching the saddle. The make of the saddle and the grip below the knee maintained the rider's seat when the horse did violent and extravagant exercises such as the "courbette" (rearing), "croupade" (kicking out behind), and the "cabriole" (jumping off the ground and extending the fore and hind legs). The French claim that this seat is necesor the show-ring, is unlikely ever to appeal to the average Englishman and American who hunts and plays polo; and we can take it that what in old days was called the "Great Saddle," and now "advanced Haute Ecole" work, is of no practical value, nor do we meet such jumps as the "piano," and three rails of progressive heights, so placed that they must be jumped as one obstacle, outside the show ring. We learn, however, from the foreigner the value of training both man and horse systematically for a particular object, as against our happy-go-lucky methods; whatever success these may meet with being really in advance of their deserts.

The Messrs. Miller, at Rugby, train ponies as well as, if not better than, anybody else in the world, and in some other individual cases excellent results are obtained; but speaking generally, the farmer's son handles the colt with but little idea of how to set about it, and the dealer's lad will probably complete the breaking—for education it can hardly be called—the horse being then sold as a finished hunter or hack. If he is properly balanced and has a good mouth the purchaser is exceptionally lucky, and if the animal answers to the leg he is luckier still. An Irish dealer at the Dublin Horse Show once told me that he had a wonderful horse to sell me; the remark caused no surprise, but I had the curiosity to ask why the animal was wonderful. "Your honor," was the reply, "he can walk, trot, and gallop, and there are very few horses in the show sary in order that the "aids" may be applied delicately, but lady exponents of the Haute Ecole perform the work just as well on trained horses, although they cannot apply the leg as a man does.

I was not at all struck with the seat, and although I was privileged to see no jumping, a careful examination of many photographs taken on the spot proved that it is abandoned in favor of our hunting seat for more practical work, and a very firm "assiette" they seem to have attained.

This riding school performance is frequently carried out with the object of demonstrating to embryo instructors to what a high pitch horse training can be carried, and of its kind it is perfectly excellent. The horses are first of all taught their work tied between two pillars, and without men on their backs. Some of the aids employed can hardly be called delicate, even when the education is complete; for example, to make the horse kick up behind, the rider gives him a severe cut with the whip just above the hocks. Doubtless these exercises develop useful muscles in the horse and ensure his balance at slow paces, as no unbalanced horse can perform them, but we need not copy either this training or what is considered the necessary seat for it; the muscles of the horse can be developed by far simpler means, and balancing is part of the animal's ordinary education. It is only fair, however, to add that these same horses are said to be able to travel over four miles of stiffish made-up country, the highest practical test possible in France, where natural fences of any sort are the exception.

The only Haute Ecole exercise I have ever heard of with a specific object peculiar to itself is the Spanish trot, which is sure to cure stumbling; but as Mr. Swire has recently told us that horses possessing this accomplishment are apt to do it unasked when waiting their turn at a fence out hunting and to strike other horses, its all-round value is doubtful. Imagine one's feelings at the covert side if one's horse did the "courbette" spontaneously, and the language of one's friends if he began the "croupade" in a narrow gateway! I think plain people and ordinary horsemen will agree with me that it is better to have an animal whom no power could induce either to rear or kick, than one trained to these evil practices.

From a recent conversation with a Spanish and a French officer concerning "show jumping," I learn that the thirst for extremely fancy obstacles is the outcome of some years' training in this particular sphere abroad. Fresh jumps are invented directly horses become clever at those in use; let us hope that the limit of the animal's powers will shortly be reached. I was, however, informed by the Commandant of Saumur that the progressive training of horses and riders for jumping had almost entirely eliminated accidents.

What we in England should aim at now is the application of scientific principles to the ordinary teaching of riding and the training of horses, and in this we can take a lesson from abroad without going into any extravagances. After the International Horse Show at Olympia (London) in 1909 the following interesting comments appeared in a French official journal, after many encomiums on English practical horsemanship:—"They (Englishmen) fail in that nothing (ce rien) which may be so easily learnt in the school.... (and which) consists in those principles of equitation by which a horse may be taught to go pleasantly wherever, whenever, and however one wishes, and at whatever pace is desired." Let us be satisfied when we have arrived at this and go no further; it is not necessary, nor can it be advantageous, to teach a horse for example to "canter false," one of the tests exacted at the Brussels International Horse Show of 1910.

Towards the end of the reign of James I serious efforts appear to have been made to improve horse training and riding in England. Lord Mostyn possesses an MS. bearing date 1618, in which the Lord President of the Council of the Marches urges the Deputy-Lieutenants of Flint to found a Riding Academy out of the rates, where horsemanship, "a necessary and useful part of every gentleman's breeding, and a thing of high estimation throughout the most flourishing and best governed part of the world," could be properly taught and horses trained. It is fair to assume that this movement was not confined to one county. The Deputy-Lieutenants, however, strongly objected on the score of expense, and history tells us that it was the custom at that time, and later on in the same century, for young gentlemen of England to go to France and there perfect themselves in riding.

In 1861 Henry Earl of Pembroke published a book entitled "Military Equitation, or a Method of Breaking Horses and Teaching Soldiers to Ride;" it ran through four editions, if not more, and on October 1, 1793, was accepted by the Adjutant General of the British Army and issued as the first text-book on the subject. The work is of absorbing interest, and contains many hints at the equitation of that time, especially from a military point of view, some of which apply in a minor degree to the present day. On the necessity for study his lordship writes as follows:

"I must urge the necessity of forming by reading, and serious study, as well as by much constant practice, proper riding masters for the Army; though I am thoroughly apprized, as the celebrated Mr. Bourgelat observes, that an ill-founded prejudice partially directs the judgment of the greater part of those people, who call themselves connoisseurs. I know full well that they suppose that practice alone can insure perfection, and that in their arguments in favor of this their deplorable system, they reject with scorn all books, and all authors: but Equitation is confessedly a science; every science is founded upon principles, and they must indispensably be necessary, because what is truly just and beautiful cannot depend upon chance. What indeed is to be expected from a man, who had no other guide than a long-continued practice, and who must of necessity labor under very great uncertainties? Incapable of accounting rationally for what he does, it must be impossible for him to enlighten me, or communicate to me the knowledge which he fancies himself possessed of. How then can I look upon such a man as a master? On the other hand, what advantages may I not obtain from the instructions of a person whom theory enables to comprehend and feel the effects of his slightest operations, and who can explain to me such principles as an age of constant practice only could never put me into a way of acquiring? Equitation does, to be sure, require also a constant, and an assiduous exercise. Habit, and a continual practice will go a great way in all exercises, which depend on the mechanics of the body, but, unless this mechanism is properly fixed, and supported on the solid basis of theory, errors will be the inevitable consequence. The knowledge of a horse is vulgarly thought so familiar, and the means of dressing him so general and so common, that you can hardly meet with a man who does not flatter himself that he has succeeded in both points, and while masters, who sacrifice every hour of their life to attain knowledge, still find themselves immersed in darkness and obscurity, men the most uninformed imagine that they have attained the summit of perfection, and in consequence thereof suppress the least inclination of learning even the first elements, a blind, and a boundless presumption is the characteristic of ignorance; the fruits of long study, and application amount to a discovery of fresh difficulties, at the sight of which a diligent man, very far from over-rating his own merit, redoubles his efforts in pursuit of fresh knowledge."

Truer words on the subject were seldom penned, and all that Lord Pembroke advises for Army Instructors applies equally well to teachers and to many horse trainers outside the Army. The Briton and the American have, as a rule, better legs for the saddle than any Continental European, and should settle into it more easily than he, and therefore excel in every branch of equitation. Some of the best horses in the world are bred in the British Isles and in America, and the only pity of it is that so many of the former are allowed to go abroad, though defenders of the practice no doubt rightly urge that this is an incentive to breeding valuable stock.

Lord Pembroke's advice, which presumably was that a scientific school of equitation should be established for the Army, similar to those now found in Vienna, Pinerolo, Hanover, Ypres, and Saumur, all of which I have seen, was not followed for over a hundred years, and history shows us the result so far as the Army is concerned. In 1802 a Hanoverian named Captain Quist was appointed to command the Riding School at Woolwich, with a view to teaching the Artillery to ride. In 1815 a Prussian riding master was sent over to instruct our Cavalry, and in 1904 a deputation of English officers visited Saumur and found plenty to learn there. Two cavalry officers were lately sent to Saumur in order to qualify as instructors for our Cavalry School at Netheravon, which came into existence after the Boer War. Let us hope that in 2011 we shall be in a position to take pupils from other nations.

The professional civilian teacher of riding is very often a retired soldier, so those outside the Army should eventually profit from Government money judiciously spent at Netheravon or the riding establishment. As in James I's time, the formation of scientific civilian schools in different parts of the country is out of the question at present from a financial point of view, as there is no demand for them; but I have great hopes that in course of time the British riding public will become alive to the fact that well-made horses are uncommon, and that no hunting man, breeder, or horse dealer can go anywhere to learn how to train them and at the same time improve his own riding; or to have his children taught equitation in a thorough and practical manner.

THE PROPER CARE OF FIRE-ARMS.

By Regimental Q. M. Sergeant Jacob Silverstein, Ninth Infantry.

The delicacy of fire-arms is not appreciated by the average person who handles or uses them. There is probably no article of machinery that is called upon to perform more accurately under varying conditions, than a high power rifle, or a high grade pistol or revolver.

It must be evident to anyone that the accuracy required of a fire-arm is secured by means of a bullet passing through the bore. It must therefore be apparent that any defect in the bore which may be due to inferior manufacturing, or which may be later caused by neglect, or improper care of the fire-arm, will have a direct bearing on the accuracy of the shooting. Therefore, the most important thing to be considered in caring for a fire-arm is the bore. It is not sufficient that the cleaning be thoroughly done. It must be done in the proper manner. It is possible to so clean a fire-arm that more injury will be done to it than would have resulted if the cleaning had never been attempted. In cleaning the bore observe the following:

The fire-arm should be cleaned immediately after the shooting, and during the shooting should there be any great number of shots fired. A good general rule to follow is to clean after every ten shots, when using black powder, and every fifteen shots when using smokeless powder.

It is more important that cleaning should take place immediately after shooting when using smokeless powder than when using black powder, as the former begins to act quickly on the polished surface of the bore, and will quickly make it impossible to restore to its original polished condition.

When possible always clean from the breach end. This is to avoid any marring or wearing away of the bore at or near the muzzle of the gun. The bullet gets its final direction when passing through the last few inches of the bore. Therefore, greater care should be taken to preserve this end of the gun in its original diameter.

If you should constantly clean from the muzzle it is possible and also very probable that wearing away will take place, and the bore will be no longer round but oval. Although the amount of wear may be very small and invisible to the eye, yet it might have a very great influence in directing the bullet's flight.

The muzzle end of the gun should be cleaned with a soft pine stick, two or three inches long, as this will not wear the muzzle or bore and will leave no marks or burrs of any kind.

It is always best to use some form of cleaning rod in cleaning a rifled fire-arm whereby the clean rag may follow the rifling.

There are two things which constitute the rifling of a rifle, revolver or pistol, and they are the lands and the grooves. The former are the high places, and the latter are the gutters or trenches cut into the bore. Unless the cleaning rag follows the rifling (the lands and the grooves) it is very likely to leave some of the residue in the grooves, which may collect moisture or set up forms of corrosion or rust, and will soon do great injury to the accuracy of the gun.

The pull-through, a form of cleaner first used by soldiers, makes a very inexpensive, and also effective cleaner. It consists simply of a strong string with a loop on one end, and a weight slightly less in diameter than the bore of the gun, or the other end. The cleaning rag is pulled through the loop. The weight is then dropped through the bore, and the cleaning rag pulled through. The cord easily turns and allows the rag to follow the twist of the rifling.

There are several forms of cleaning rods on the market which allow the rod to turn with the rifling. These should always be used in preference to the rigid rod.

Water should never be run through the bore of the gun when it can be possibly avoided. Sometimes when the powder has caked it is almost impossible to clean the gun properly without the use of hot water. When this is done, remove the barrel and pour the water through it, and thoroughly clean and dry before replacing. Where the removal of the barrel isn't possible, pour the water through from the breach end, being careful that none of it gets into the breech mechanism.

After using water, the bore must be thoroughly dried and allowed to stand for twenty-four hours. Then dry it again and oil.

To prevent rust where an arm is not in frequent use, use The Ideal Anti-Rust Rope.

A fire-arm may be kept in any climate for an indefinite period by inserting one of the Ideal Anti-Rust Ropes in the bore, and allowing it to stand. When the fire-arm is to be used, the Rope can be pulled from the bore and the arm is ready for immediate use, and free from rust, dust, or other foreign matter.

The outside of the gun is largely a question of appearance excepting the matter of sight and stock. Care should be taken that a fire-arm is not leaned up against a stone wall, stone or brick building, or placed in any other position, whereby the front sight of the gun is likely to become worn down. Bear in mind, that the least wearing away of the front sight will affect the elevation. Care must also be taken to see that the sights do not become bent or otherwise injured.

The stock of the gun should be well cleaned and oiled frequently. If the stock is not kept well oiled, it may absorb moisture and swell, causing the barrel to be slightly bent, which of course will cause inaccurate shooting. Too much care cannot be taken in seeing that the stock is kept well oiled and made practically moisture proof.

CAPTAIN GEORGE R. McLEAN.

LAYING CHESS AT END OF SECOND BEND.

PUTTING ON THE FINISHING TOUCHES.

The matter of the proper kind of oil to use is not a small one. Care should be taken that the oil used on the gun, especially on the bore, should be absolutely free from acid. Mineral oils are better than vegetable or animal oils, but the difficulty in a mineral oil is that in the refining process, the acids are not always removed.

Springfield Nitro Cleaner which we know is free from acid and recommend it as a rust preventive, as well as a lubricant.

What is known as "Ringing" is a swelling in the bore caused by firing when there is a rag or other obstruction in the bore. Sometimes the barrel bursts, but more frequently it will "ring" the barrel. To prevent "ringing" use The Ideal Anti-Rust Rope. When this is pulled from the bore, there is no question but that it is free from obstructions.

We also recommend The Ideal Anti-Rust Rope for cleaning. There is nothing better for dry cleaning than repeatedly pulling the rope through the bore of the arm.

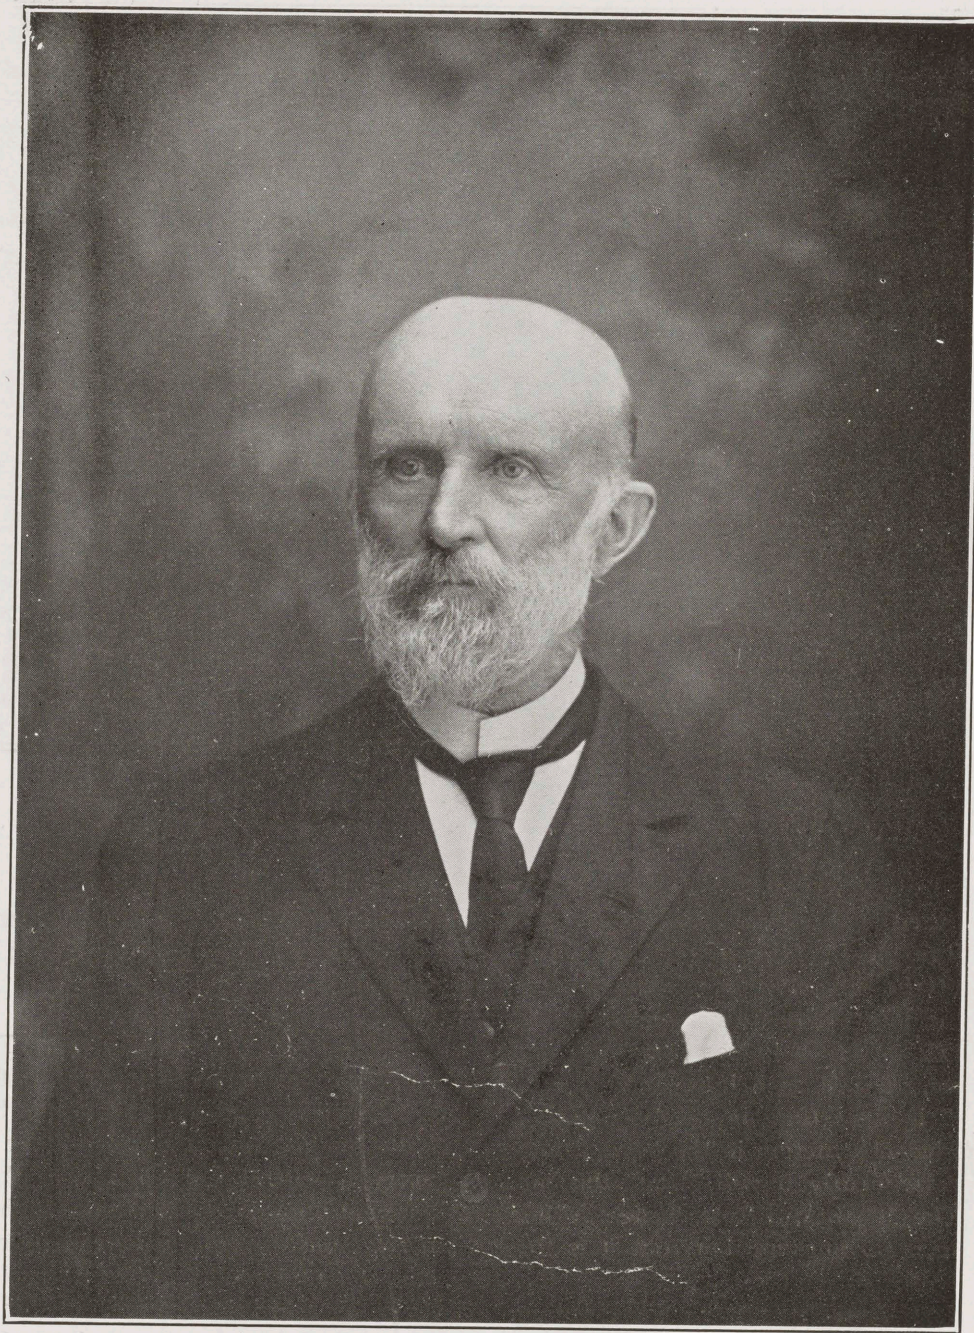

The working parts of the fire-arm should be kept well lubricated for the double purpose of preventing rust, and for having them perform their functions with as little friction as possible. We recommend Springfield Nitro Cleaner, "the kind the soldiers use," for use on the working parts, both as a rust preventive and as a lubricant.

Time has in no way dimmed the ardor of General F. D. Lehr, of Allentown, and no man in the State holds the National Guard dearer to his heart than the former commander of the Fourth Infantry. General Lehr is to-day the only Brigadier General of the National Guard residing in Lehigh county. In addition to serving in the State forces, he was also active during the Civil War. He was commissioned by Governor Andrew G. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, as recruiting agent for Lehigh county, to serve as such in West Virginia from September, 1863, until further orders. These appointments were authorized by a special act of Congress, which empowered the Governors of the several States in the Union to appoint recruiting agents to serve in the States declared to be in rebellion. The object of this service was to fill the quotas of the several sub-divisions of the States of the Union. This effort, however, proved to be a failure owing to the interference of some of the officers in the several departments in restricting and limiting the territory in which the agents were to operate, consequently the attempt to recruit was abandoned and the agents retired. General

Lehr is a member of E. Y. Young Post, No. 87, Department of Pennsylvania, G. A. R.

General Lehr was Mayor of Allentown from 1890 to 1893. He was civil engineer of the city from 1869 to 1889, and served in the Common Council from 1897 to 1901. He is one of the most popular and likewise distinguished citizens of Allentown.

SECOND REGIMENT INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION.

Definite plans have been made for the Industrial Exposition which is to be given by the Second Infantry at its Armory, Broad street above Diamond, from November 16th to November 30th, inclusive. The committee having charge of the affair is composed of Captain Albert H. Ladner, Jr., Chairman, and Lieutenant George Roth, Secretary, in addition to the following members who each have charge of the departments before their names: Entertainment, Major George S. Crampton; Construction and Decoration, Captain H. H. Walton; Printing, Captain Frederick F. Knapp; Finance, Captain James E. Johnston; Floor, Captain Ralph Childs; Advertising and Publicity, Lieutenant Lloyd R. Blynn.

The exposition is to be given to raise funds to help defer the expenses of the regiment to the Panama Exposition in California in 1915. When the Panama Exposition was established, Colonel Hamilton D. Turner, in command of the Second, immediately became active in arranging so that his command could perform its summer tour of duty at the Exposition. All necessary plans have been made and the expense of transportation and subsistence has been figured out to a finality. The trip will take about three weeks. While in San Francisco the regiment will encamp upon the Presidio and will give exhibition drills and otherwise demonstrate the high point of efficiency which the Pennsylvania National Guard has reached and of which the Second Infantry is so good an example. There will be ample time allowed to the officers and men of the regiment to enjoy the Exposition. Colonel Turner expects to take the maximum number of men permitted in each company so that including the field, staff, line, band and enlisted strength there will be about 900 men.

It is estimated that the cost per man will be $200, and of this amount it is expected that the men themselves will save $50. When drills were resumed on October 15th each company commander gave to the members of his company pass books and upon each drill night it is expected that each man will deposit 33 cents. If upon the expiration of enlistments and by reason of honorable discharges men leave the command the money will be refunded to them, but no one will be permitted to withdraw his deposit as long as he remains in the regiment.

At the forthcoming Industrial Exposition all of the money received beyond the actual expenses will go into the Panama trip fund. For this reason the friends of the Second Infantry are expected to come forward handsomely. The Industrial Exposition will be open from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 10.30 or 11 at night. The entire drill floor will be divided into booths which will be sold to merchants and manufacturers. Every afternoon there will be lectures on various interesting topics and at intervals a moving picture exhibition with day light films will be given. An automobile will be raffled off as well as several smaller things. Music will be furnished by the Second Infantry Band.

Work upon the addition to the armory is progressing rapidly and Colonel Turner fully expects to have the new part in condition for use at the time of the Exposition.

General Dougherty, in recent general orders, has devoted much attention towards emphasizing the needs of proper drills. The orders are clear in explaining the purposes of the exercises and are very timely. The soundness of General Dougherty's statements cannot be disputed. The orders are deserving of the close perusal of every officer of the Guard.

Captain George R. McLean, of Wilkes-Barre, has been highly honored by the Democratic party, with its nomination for Congressman-at-Large. Captain McLean has long been a favorite throughout the National Guard, and the results of the election will be watched with keen interest by his army of friends. He served his State with distinction as a soldier and officer of the Ninth Regiment for fourteen years, and also participated as a volunteer in the war with Spain. Captain McLean is in every sense a man of ability, a true gentleman, and a credit both to the Guard and to the State.

Reports that the War Department is planning to reduce the heavy weights which infantrymen carry on the march or in actual campaigning are indeed welcome. There was never much sense in imposing burdens on the backs of the men, and it is well time that the weights be reduced to a minimum. Sound judgment long ago should have decided that it was an unnecessary hardship for a man about to engage in a long march to place a heavy load upon his back. This plan was all right for a mule, but never for a soldier. The infantrymen primarily are intended to do military duty, and not to be beasts of burden. A little common sense would go a long way towards putting an old practice at an end.

Lieutenant J. Fred Shofer, son-in-law of the late Colonel William F. Richardson, will shortly present a plan to Adjutant General Stewart on the matter of baking in the field, which is expected to vastly improve conditions in this respect. Lieutenant Shofer says that with a battery of eight men and four ovens he will be able to supply the division during an encampment with fresh bread at the rate of three cents a loaf. This will not only mean a great saving, but also provide wholesome bread, and the issue would be made in an absolutely sanitary condition. Lieutenant Shofer is an expert in this particular line and the innovation should prove quite an advanced step in the betterment of the subsistence department.

The Hotel Hart, long popular as a hostelry, at Wilkes-Barre, is now under new management, and an even more successful career is in prospect for the house. John J. Lee is the new boniface, and he is an unusually genial host who is sure to increase the patronage of the house. Burton J. Newton, a "live wire," for years identified with the Hotel Hart, is associated with Mr. Lee. "Burt" is one of the best-liked hotel men in the State, and is a splendid asset for the Hart.

NOTES

Colonel Richard Coulter, Jr., of the Tenth Infantry, President of the National Guard Association of Pennsylvania, has been invited to make the Hotel Jermyn his headquarters during the convention at Scranton. Indications point to the convention being the most successful in years.

Captain Thomas Russell, Jr., of Company H, of the Thirteenth Infantry, has had supervising charge of the rifle range near Rocky Glenn on the outskirts of Scranton. Captain Russell is an enthusiastic rifle shot and has devised many improvements on the range which, it is declared, make it one of the best and safest ranges in the State. The location of this range is ideal. It has a splendid light at all times and is of easy access to the city. As a result Colonel Stilwell's men are found in front of the targets in large numbers each day. It is generally believed that the Thirteenth Infantry may lead in rifle work this year.

While the rifle work of the Ninth Infantry has been retarded through the caving in of large strips of ground, particularly at the eight and one thousand yard ranges, the practice has been successfully carried on at the Wannamie and Pittston ranges. It is expected, however, that owing to these handicaps the regiment will not be as high in its standard of efficiency as it was last year in rifle work. Colonel Dorrance Reynolds, always indafatigable in his efforts to advance the standard of his command, has decided to have a modern range constructed that will probably cost twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars. The Colonel already has an option on a desirable site and easily reached from Wilkes-Barre, Pittston and Plymouth, and it is believed that if the plan for the construction of this range is carried out, it will be equally as good as the State range at Mt. Gretna and compare favorably with Sea Girt and the larger national ranges.

Colonel O'Neill, who is always abreast of the times, called out a detail from the Fourth Infantry, in the parade given in conjunction with Allentown's celebration of Columbus Day. The Colonel was the marshal of the parade, and Major Frank D. Beary commanded the provisional battalion. Colonel Harry C. Trexler was Chief of Staff. Efforts of this kind contribute much toward success in securing recruits for the Guard.

Participating in the parade were: Platoon of Mounted Police. Marshal. Staff. Company E, Second Regiment, Sons of Veterans' Reserves Band. Provisional Battalion, Major Frank D. Beary, commanding. Company B, Fourth Infantry, Captain Orlando C. Miller. Company D, Fourth Infantry, Captain William C. Gessner. Company E, Sons of Veterans Reserves, Captain William Carl. Company A, Engineers' Battalion, has been making excellent progress in its work, and from all reports has met with the greatest success in a number of up-to-date plans.

Only recently, thirty men of the company on a Saturday afternoon constructed a wooden bridge across the northerly end of Lake Lincoln, and after going over "double quick" under command of First Lieutenant Ray W. Fuller, permitted 500 people to walk over and then dismantled the structure.

The stunt, the first of a series to be given during the fall, winter and spring, to keep the military engineers in shape for active duty, drew a large throng to the park. The engineers were late in arriving, but finally at 3 o'clock they came, with Lieutenant Fuller in the lead, and army wagons, loaded with the lumber for the bridge following.

Orders were given, the wagons stopped, tripods nineteen feet apart, were placed in pairs across the lake, the balks were strung across the tripods, and the chees or flooring was put down cross-ways on the balks. Lieutenant Fuller fell into the lake on one occasion or so, but otherwise things went all right. Forty-five minutes after the engineers arrived, they were tramping over the bridge, seventy-five feet in length, with an end on either side of the lake. Eighteen minutes later the bridge had been dismantled and the engineers were on their way to a clambake.

The engineers have secured from Adjutant General Stewart thirty of the new army working blouses. Lieutenant Fuller states that these are very comfortable and just the thing for rough work in the field, the cost being but 75 cents for each garment.

First Lieutenant Ray W. Fuller, who is the active senior officer at present of the Engineer Battalion, is regarded as a "live wire" in this scientific branch of the service. Lieutenant Fuller, in addition to the outside work, is preparing a model construction for armory use of one-quarter size the original.

Lieutenant Fuller has also conceived the idea of having a section of twenty men stationed at Wilkes-Barre under command of a Sergeant or probably a Second Lieutenant, and has already met with a number of responses from men in Luzerne county, who have had active service in the United States Corps of Engineers.

Captain Anderson, of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, has been detailed as instructor and inspector of the Militia Engineers of Pennsylvania, New York and Ohio. The Pennsylvania boys are looking forward with great interest in the practical work which Captain Anderson has outlined for the fall and winter season.

Captain Dunning has taken up his residence, permanently, in Florida, and it is generally believed that he will ask to be placed on the unassigned list in the near future. Lieutenant Fuller will then be advanced to the rank of Captain. While there has been considerable talk about the organization of an Engineers Company in Pittsburgh, and the subsequent formation of a battalion, these plans are not likely to materialize for some time.

The Pittston Battalion of the Ninth has just received several old cannon from the War Department through the efforts of Congressman Bowman. They are to be mounted and placed in front of the armory. These field pieces were used during the Spanish-American War and will provide interesting relics of that conflict for the citizens of Pittston.

Colonel Stillwell will not permit the men of his command to practice on the rifle range on the Sabbath. This step is in accord with the sentiment of the majority.

Owing to pressure of business, Lieutenant L. G. Brown, of Company L, of the Thirteenth Infantry, has tendered his resignation. It is expected that two other junior officers are likely to retire from the Thirteenth for the same reason.

It is reported that strong efforts are being made by the officers of the Williamsport Battalion of the Twelfth Infantry and by some of the leading members of the Chamber of Commerce of that city to secure a sufficient amount from the next armory appropriation to construct a substantial new administration building. The Williamsport companies at the present time simply have a drill hall.

It is to be hoped that the Pennsylvania commanders will take kindly to the invitation extended by the National Rifle Association for the entrance of regimental teams in the league matches of this winter. Lieutenant Albert S. Jones, secretary of the association, with offices at 1025 Woodward Building, Washington, has outlined the plans for the matches in the following circular letter to the commanders:

"We have received several requests lately from our affiliated regiments for permission to enter teams in our indoor rifle shooting league matches this winter. It has not been possible for us to grant this request as the league shooting is intended only for civilian rifle clubs. However, our association is ready and willing to stand sponsor for an inter-regimental league to be carried on this winter on armory ranges if the regiments desire it.

"We would very much like to have an expression of opinion from your regiment as to whether you would care to enter a team for league matches this winter to determine the regimental gallery championship of the United States. The great difficulty in the carrying out of such matches is the difference in length of ranges and different styles of shooting, arms used, etc., of the different organizations, so that we would have to establish a set of conditions to suit the majority of regiments. It is proposed to make the conditions about as follows:

"Size of team, 6; distance, 50 or 75 feet; target, N. R. A. gallery; arm, the Government's 22 calibre; ammunition, 22 short. Number of shots and positions to be agreed on.

"If your regiment would like to enter such a competition on the above conditions, please advise this office, or if you would like to enter such a competition with different conditions and would suggest the conditions desired, we will see what can be done. Further particulars will be promulgated when the regiments have been heard from."

The members of the Pennsylvania Commandery of the Naval and Military Order of the Spanish-American War will attend the annual memorial services at the Episcopal Church of the Advocate, Eighteenth and Diamond streets, on Sunday evening, November 3.

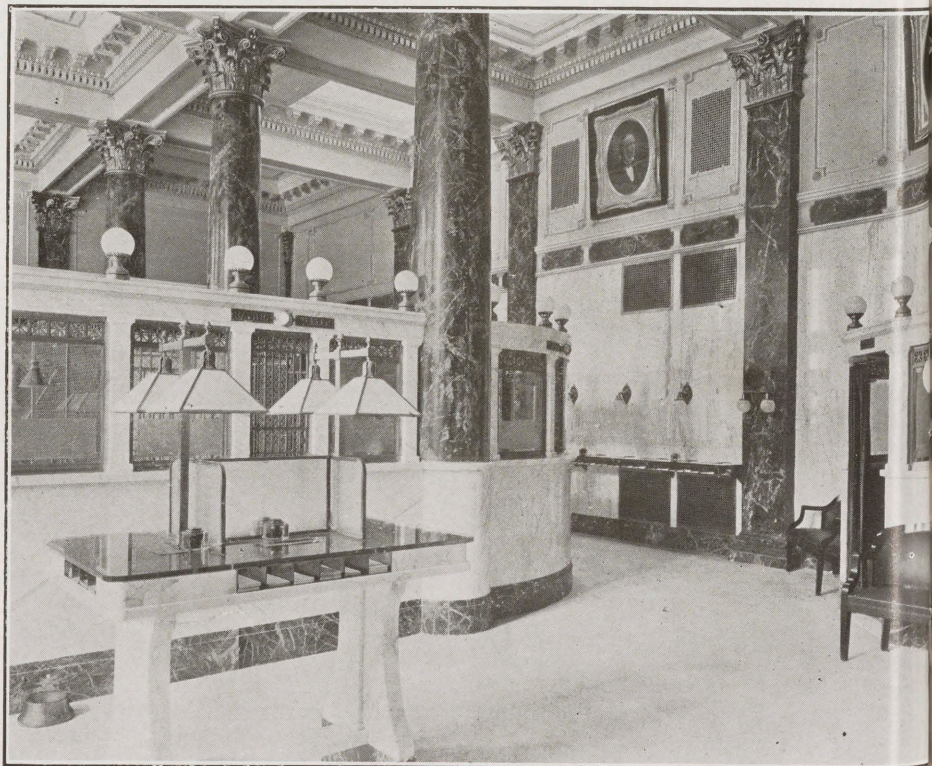

The officers of the Eighteenth Infantry, Duquesne Greys, tendered a dinner to General Albert J. Logan, of the Second Brigade, at the Hotel Schenley, Pittsburgh, on Tuesday evening, October 22. General Logan was until recently the commander of this splendid regiment. The affair was a complete success and much enjoyed by the large number of guests in attendance.

It is stated that Captain William Zierdt, of Company K, of the Ninth, will take an examination for a commission in the regular service. The Army's gain will be the Guard's loss.

The members of Battery C, stationed at Phoenixville, are very busy at the present time improving their new quarters. It is expected that Captain Cox will have excellent housing facilities for his battery.

THE COMPOSITION OF GENERAL A. J. LOGAN'S 2D BRIGADE STAFF

is likely to be as follows: Major Adj. Gen. C. B. Mehard; Major James E. McNary, Inspector; Major E. Lowery Humes, Judge Advocate; Major J. Clyde Miller, Quartermaster; Major Marshall Henderson, Commissary; Major Henry P. Bope, Ordnance; Major Chas. C. Wiley, Surgeon; Captain Richard W. Watson, A. D. C.; Captain Ralph E. Flinn, A. D. C.

Your Rifles Kept Perfectly Clean from One Encampment to Another.

The Ideal Anti-Rust Rope

Has solved the problem, of keeping the rifles in perfect condition at all times. They are saturated with a rust preventive and when placed in the rifle they exclude all air and moisture. Being larger than the bore the oil is pressed against the entire inside of the barrel. You have undoubtedly had the experience of taking a rifle from the arm rack and finding rust spots in the barrel. Although the rifle had been well cleaned and oiled when put away. The trouble comes from this fact. Oil will very often, on smooth and highly polished metal, slide off, on small patches of the metal, in little globules, leaving the metal perfectly bare on these patches. Then moisture gets in its work and sets its indelible seal in the glistening steel, causing damage and a constant eyesore and increased worry to every company commander. To keep your rifles spotless they will require daily inspection under the old way of treating them. Air and moisture are rust breeders, are everywhere and at all times.

The Ideal Anti-Rust Ropes

Have solved the problem. These ropes will absolutely prevent rust where they are used and all worry and trouble are eliminated.

FREE SAMPLE—We will send to any Captain or Quartermaster, Four Ideal Anti-Rust Ropes, a solid brass Ramrod, bottle of Gun Oil, Ex. prepaid, upon receipt of 50 cents in stamps, which amount may be deducted from first order
